

Dear Mr. Hastings,

Too many workplaces – and across all industries – excuse, ignore and even facilitate sexual assault, harassment and abuses of power.

We know that between 25 and 85 percent of women report having experienced sexual harassment in the workplace, and yet three-quarters of all workplace harassment incidents go unreported. This is likely because 25 percent of those individuals identified their harassers as men with influence over their careers.

Netflix has certainly found itself at the center of the #metoo moment with the dismissal of former top public relations executive, Jonathan Friedland¹, as well as the controversy surrounding your show leads Kevin Spacey² and Danny Masterson³. While we commend your dismissal of these individuals, we believe this is likely a systemic problem within your corporation.

The We Believe You Fund was established to create transformational change in workplaces to eradicate the dangerous, imbalanced power dynamic that is the root cause of sexual harassment and assault. As part of this effort, we are interested in the ongoing discussions, plans and actions within Netflix aimed at transforming your corporate culture.

Please complete this questionnaire⁴ about your corporate practices around these issues, including non-disclosure agreements, forced arbitration, percentages of women, people of color and LGBTQ people in leadership, pay equity and clear reporting mechanisms, by September 21, 2018.

In addition to the survey, please include the following information.

- Any actions you have undertaken to assess and address the root causes of sexual harassment, assault and power in your workplace.
- Any surveys you have conducted to solicit feedback from employees about how to best address harassment and assault in the workplace and results of those surveys.
- Any steps you have taken to ensure employees understand your policies and their rights regarding sexual harassment, assault, reporting, retaliation, hiring and retention.
- Whether you would be willing to collaborate with The We Believe You Fund to address these issues.

The We Believe You Fund will be releasing the findings from the survey this fall. If you choose not to complete the survey, we will make note of Netflix's unwillingness to participate in this effort.

Regardless of where you work and what your job title, we believe you should be able to earn a living free from fear of sexual harassment, abuse and violence.
